CROP CONDITIONS.

Two Seasons Compared-How the Problem of Price is to be Solved.

New OBERANS. March 28.—We have already entered the second half of the cotton season of (890-91, and the comparison with he last cotton year is very striking. It will be remembered that at the com-mencement of the year 1890 prices began a the near the year rand prices began a sharp upward movement, which by this time a year ago had carried the price of July delivery to 11.27, and on May 25 the record shows that July delivery sold at 12.20, and December at 10.31, the highest prices reached during the season.

We extend to the year rand prices began a tank to the price of the price of the price of the prices of th

We naturally look for the cause of such a We insturant look for the cause of such a decided improvement, and find it in the fact that the crop, which in the fall had been estimated as ranging about seven and a half millions, later promised a yield of less than seven and a quarter, and the world was face to face with the prospect of consumptive demand in excess of the sunds.

The influences operating upon the market during the season of '90-94, have been exactly the reverse of those controlling its course during the previous year. Estimates have steadily risen from 7,600,000, until now it is believed by a great many that the total yield will reach 8,500,000 bales. While consumption has unquestionably made a good advance, encouraged by the low prices, and a part of our increase has been offset by a falling off in the supply from other sources of about two hundred and sifty thousand bales, there will still reand lifty thousand bales, there will still re-main, at the end of this senson, an amount of cotton to be carried over, variously es-timated as between five hundred thousand and one million bales, largely composed of the low grades and undesirable styles, which have been so plentiful this year.

Such is a brief comparison of the crop conditions of the two sensons. Convinced from the reports which we reconvinced from the reports which we re-ceived from our numerous correspondents, that the yield promised to exceed all ex-pectations, we have steadily cautioned our friends against buying and have pointed out, day by day, in our dispatches to the Associated Press, the reasons for the steady and pronounced decline which we provided.

In our market reports, as published daily in a number of the leading journals of the South, we have made our remarks upon the situation as applied to actual cotton a spe-cial feature, and as erop estimates in-creased during the season we felt that an inherent weakness in spots would develop that would prevent any permanent advance in futures. The only reaction of consequence that has taken place throughout the past six nonths occurred in January, impelled by the buying of those who looked for a repetition of the course pursued by the market about same time the year before, regardless of the almost entire reversal of the conditions than eviating. Such a case: conditions then existing. Such a senti-mental advance could not but fail to hold, and the downward turn which prices then took was not arrested until market con-tracts and declined $4c. When June was at 9c on for February 4, and there seemed a general inclination to consider that price as offering an opportunity for cheap purchase, we predicted without equivocation, that a crop in excess of $5.000,000 bales meant, in this market, $1/c for June and July. The record shows that since then June has sold as low as $4.6 and July at 8.54, while spots languished, with only nominal demand at 8% for middling. Our belief in a monster crop has been decided since the beginning of the season, though of course we did not expect any-thing like so large a yield as now seems likely, and we have taken actual cotton as a basis for anticipating lower prices. So far as such a belief would have any effect, we have encouraged speculation on the bear side since prices were 2 cents higher, with considerable profit to those of our many friends who have followed our advice. The question to determine now is.

whether the price named discounts a crop which will certainly be $,300,000, and may possibly reach $,500,000, which latter figure. the movement to date and the reports of cotton sill to come forward from plantations and small towns, would seem to indicate as an easy possibility.

Our daily sales of spot cotton are small and out of proportion to the amount of stock held here (which is now 139,000 larger than last year) and receipts coming in, and it would be much easier, in the absence of outside supporting influences, to create a decline than an improvement, unless there should be a more active demand for spots than now exists.

Despite such unfavorable influences there are some indications of a feeling in favor of better prices, not justified, however, by the outlook. It is argued by some that the increase in the world's consumption makes an American crop of seven and three-fourth millions a necessity and, as it is generally conceded that the present season s been simply a phenomenal one, like use of 1870-71 and 1882-83, and just as cely as they were to be followed by short ops, the surplus necessarily carried over on this year may be needed to supply a essible deficit next year. The problem of price is thus to be solved the outcome of the crop not yet planted, fore the seed is in the ground it would Before the seed is in the ground it would require great hardihood to venture a prediction regarding either the yield or the course of prices dependent upon the yield. Should the planting season be unfavorable in any way, the natural result would be a general strengthening of the whole line, particularly of the winter months, while on the other hand a favorable outlook would leave summer months depressed by the weight of heavy stocks everywhere and the weight of heavy stocks everywhere and the prospect of so large a surplus to be carried over to another season would weaken new crop positions. In speculation, contradictions are a prem speculation, contradictions are a pre-vailing feature at times and upset all cal-culations and statistical reasons why the market for an article, should pursue a course different from what it actually does. Statistics and the laws of supply and demand will tell in price in the long run, but, in the meantime, sentiment is a dangerou factor and often runs counter to condition that should cause the market to go in an litions seem to us to favor lower prices. Whether sentiment can be created to ignore them, is something the near future will determine. Your respectfully, ATWOOD VIOLETT & Co.

FORT WORTH, TEX., March 31, 1891. Clear and quite pleasant to-day, and business generally was good, considering it was the last day in the month, and people naturally purchase more cautiously. The streets were thronged with people, at any rate, and everywhere presented scenes of liveliness. Upon the courtyard square. where the country people do mostly congregate, a pleasing spectacle met the eye, for the plaza was crowded all day with peo-ple and vehicles, and some product or other was offered for sale, and as a result the general produce markets were pretty well supplied with all commodities. There are no especial changes to note however, in the country produce lines, except in poul-try and chickens, which are lower, the supply being better. Butter is quite firm for choice, and the supply is limited. A general revision is noted in wholesale nuts, also in fruits and vegetables, a slight revision in dried fruits, and a thorough re-vision in packing house products. Wholesale sugars are off, though quotations have not been revised. A drop may be looked for.

THE RICE CROP.

Lively Competition Promised by the Exporters in Japan.

The following report from Japan in regard to the rice crop of the present season will be a matter of interest to the many persons in this state interested in the cultivation of the staple. The report is official, being from the United States consul at one being from the United States consultations of the largest Japanese ports:

"The reports concur in estimating the yield of race this season as unusually large; 173,701,500 bushels is a good average crop, over 145,000 bushels but this year as much as 248.145.000 bushels will probably be produced. If this esti-mate be realized, the quantity of rice available for export will not be far short of 74,443,700 bushels, which is believed to be more than America and Europe can possi-bly take, and is about ten times as much as the largest export hitherto made in any one year from Japan."

Judging from this report it is highly probable that the Carolina planters will find a very lively competitor in the exporters of Japan. The Carolina rice is always of such an excellent quality however that it is able
